This is a play about three women, two of whom are sisters, on the Mexican-American border. Two estranged sisters come together when one has to bail the other out of jail. Elizabeth Ramos and Anna LaMadrid play the sisters and Kim Griffin plays a new friend, Erica.

Playwright Issac Gómez says of his play, having its world premiere, that he “wanted to explore how two sisters could grow up in the same family, yet hold a completely different set of values and political beliefs.” What family hasn’t had to ask themselves that question?

Jess McLeod directs this play that seems to be a perfect mirror to our lives today.
